Range Kleen Mfg., Inc. Introduces NEW “Fat Trapper” made from Recycled Material

Lima, OH – March 24, 2006 - Range Kleen Mfg., Inc. announces a major revision to the popular household item “The Fat Trapper”. “The Fat Trapper”, a plastic airtight container that holds used cooking grease in a disposable foil lined bag, will now be offered manufactured out of recycled material to retailers and consumers. According to Tim Clutter, Range Kleen Vice President - Chief Merchandising Officer, “The Fat Trapper” has always been an environmentally friendly product. The main purpose is to give consumers a convenient way to dispose of used cooking grease instead of pouring it down the drain or flushing it down the toilet. Grease, oils and fats generated from household cooking is a serious concern for waste water treatment facilities across the country and is one of their largest, repetitive problems. The grease, oils and fats that are flushed through the waste water system has a major impact on the performance of the pumps that handle the treatment process. Not only does this solve a huge problem for the waste water treatment plant, it also reduces the amount of clogs that home owners experience when they pour the grease down their drains. With the introduction of the new recycled material “Fat Trapper”, the product has become even more environmentally friendly.” “The Fat Trapper” made from recycled material will also be offered in a new fashion color Clutter mentions, “Our customer was looking for a more fashionable version of “The Fat Trapper” and black is very popular in appliances and other kitchen gadgets. It just made sense to offer the item in black while making it out of recycled material too.” “The Fat Trapper” has retail distribution today, but will be available at major retail chains such as Linens N Things, Meijer Stores and Wal*Mart Stores in late spring of 2006 and is also available on the Range Kleen web page @ www.rangekleen.com
